Meet Alison Lapper. She paints pictures for a living. But she's no ordinary painter. To start with, she (A1) ... her hands when she paints. She uses her mouth! Alison was born without arms and she has very short legs. Her physical disabilities caused her to spend the first 17 years of her life in a hospital. But this didn't stop her from achieving her goals in life. She (A2) ... that even though she was disabled, there was no reason why she could not express herself. This was what got her to start drawing paintings. Her paintings are quite impressive and they do not look like they (A3) ... by someone who used her mouth. Alison continues to encourage others by telling them never to give up hope of becoming successful. Her positive attitude has inspired many disabled people throughout the world and (A4) ... to do so in the future.

Fashion trends are endlessly recycled. Styles that were popular in the 80s, 70s, 60s and 50s and even earlier than this, continue to inspire today's designers. Even people (A9) ... in producing top fashion labels (A10) ... back to the clothes of the past. They often find their best ideas in things (A11) ... by the young people from previous generations, and reproduce these rather than creating something completely new. This means that if a style looked good and was popular before, there is every (A12) ... that it will be again. So take a look at photos of your parents or grandparents when they were your age. They might give you some ideas for your own wardrobe!

Robert Taylor talks about his new art show

§ 1. Like all children, I was always getting myself and the kitchen table in a mess when I first took an interest in painting. Unlike many kids, who give up activities like art for other subjects when they go through school, I continued painting throughout my childhood. Now, after years of enjoyment, I've finally taken the scary decision to show off some of my favourite pieces of work by holding an exhibition at Glebe Street library. Inviting people to see my work is a new idea and one which I'm looking forward to.

§ 2. I've never had any formal art training. When I was trying to decide what I should study at university, art as a subject never entered my head. I always thought my parents wanted me to follow a subject that would be useful when I was looking for a job, so I ended up taking a business course. Looking back, my parents would probably have supported me whatever my decision, but I decided to do what I thought was best for everyone.

§ 3. And during my time at university, I rarely did much in the way of painting. It wouldn't have been easy to paint anyway as I lived in university accommodation and had very little space. I kept an interest in art though and visited local exhibitions whenever I could, but that was about it. It was later in my thirties while I was working that I discovered my love of the activity again. Since then I've made a point of spending at least one evening a week painting.

§ 4. However, my works have only ever been seen by trusted friends and relatives. They've always given me plenty of support and encouraged me to continue with my art. But I've always wondered what people who I didn't know would think, people who could give me an honest opinion of my ability. The library have been very helpful and offered me a room for the show. They've asked me to supply questionnaires about the event and I've included a section for visitors' comments about the works. I'm very much looking forward to reading these opinions.

I've spent years studying happiness and one of the most significant (B19) ... (CONCLUDE) is that there is hardly any correlation between the circumstances of people's lives and how happy they are. A moment's reflection should make this obvious. We all know people who have a (B20) ... (RELATE) easy life, yet are always miserable, and others who have suffered many (B21) ... (HARD) but remain essentially happy. The first secret is gratitude. Ungrateful people cannot be happy. We have a tendency to think that being unhappy (B22) ... (ABLE) people to complain. It is truer to say that finding cause for complaining leads to people becoming unhappy. The second secret is the realisation that happiness is a by-product of activities that give our lives meaning.
